

What do YOU Know About SYNAGRO?

Residents living near sites where sewer sludge has been applied have reported significant health complaints such as burning noses and throats, burning eyes, vomiting, nausea, and respiratory complications that residents associate with the sludge application.

But what about YOU? Synagro workers like you work with the by-products of human and industrial waste. Are you worried about your health and safety? Or about other workplace conditions such as not having enough breaks, being forced to work overtime, or not getting enough training?

Synagro is owned by the Carlyle Group, a giant buyout firm. Workers and communities in your city and across the United States are joining together to hold Carlyle accountable for its treatment of workers and residents.

Complete a survey about your workplace conditions to join our efforts and make sure your concerns are heard.

More information:

SynagroStinks.CarlyleExposed.org
info@CarlyleExposed.org

